Henry Leutwyler

Philippe Halsman. A Photographer's Life

7 September 2024 – 19 January 2025

In 1979, at the age of 17, Henry Leutwyler discovered the work of Philippe Halsman at the International Center of Photography (ICP) in New York, a month after the death of this major figure in twentieth-century photography. Thirty-eight years later, in 2017, Leutwyler dives deep into Halsman's archives, to which he gained access thanks to a meeting with Philippe Halsman's daughter Irene a few years earlier. He spent several months staging his countless personal belongings to create a biography of the famous photographer through his objects. The result is Philippe Halsman. A Photographer's Life, produced in collaboration with The Halsman Archive and presented as an installation as part of the Biennale Images Vevey 2024. A pair of spectacles, tripods, various passports, travel soaps: the objects photographed bear witness to the prolific career of one of the most influential artists of his generation, and author of 101 covers for LIFE magazine. This series of images also reveals Halsman's almost obsessive practice of keeping everything. By creating a portrait of a photographer through his objects, Leutwyler pays a unique tribute to the artist he admires and to the history of photography, while evoking the era of the silver image in the digital age.

Biographical note on Henry Leutwyler

Swiss-born Henry Leutwyler (1961) is a photographer with an international career. Self-taught, he first tried to enter the Vevey School of Photography (CEPV), moved to Paris and then settled in New York. His portraits of celebrities such as Julia Roberts, Martin Scorsese, Michelle Obama and Iggy Pop have appeared on the covers of Vogue US, Vanity Fair, Esquire and New York Times Magazine.

Now living in New York, Henry Leutwyler has published 11 books with the German publisher Steidl, including Neverland Lost: A Portrait of Michael Jackson in 2010. This project - featuring photographs taken by Henry Leutwyler of Michael Jackson's personal effects following their sale at public auction, painting an original portrait of the singer through his archives - was exhibited at the Biennale Images Vevey 2018, alongside photographs of objects that once belonged to Frank Sinatra.

Mining Photography

The ecological footprint of image production

13 February – 8 June 2025

© Optics Division of the Metabolic Studio

Mining Photography is devoted to the material history of the main resources used to produce images, addressing the social and political context of their extraction and waste, as well as their relationship with climate change. Since its invention, photography has depended on the extraction and exploitation, on a global scale, of so-called natural resources, whether bitumen, carbon, copper or silver in the 19th century, of which the photographic industry was one of the biggest consumers at the end of the 20th century. Today, with digital photography, the production of images depends on rare earths and metals such as coltan, cobalt and europium. With historical photographs, contemporary artistic proposals and interviews with specialists, the exhibition tells the story of photography as an industrial production, showing the extent to which this medium has been profoundly linked to man's evolution of the environment.

The exhibition will be presented for the first and only time in the French-speaking world, in a version specially adapted for the spaces of the Swiss Camera Museum.

An exhibition from the Museum für Kunst und Gewerbe in Hamburg.
